Third option

- Since 2013, after a Constitutional Court decision, the gender entry in the Register of Births, Marriages and Deaths could be left blank.
- In November 2017, the Constitutional Court upheld the complaint of Vanja, an intersex person, and decided that a positive entry outside the binary gender model must be possible.
- In December 2018, the Bundestag and Bundesrat passed the “Law on the Amendment of Information to be Entered in Birth Certificates”.

Third option

FADA criticism:

- Minimal consensus, principle of self-determination not fully realised. FADA had recommended a Gender Identity Law that would also replace the outdated and partly unconstitutional Transsexuals Act (TSG)
- Lack of guidance from the Federal Government

Consequences:

- Need for expertise and research

Gender-based rules in employment and public service law (federal law)

- (1) Bans on discrimination (General Equal Treatment Act, Pay Transparency Act etc.)
- (2) Maternal protection provisions
 - No need for legislative steps. Necessary adjustments can be made by way of interpretation of law through the court system.

Gender-based rules in employment and public service law (federal law)

(3) Binary legal differentiation on grounds of gender without intention to favour (bathrooms; uniforms)

→ Legislative adjustments required

(4) Positive discrimination: Legal measures intended to favour an underrepresented gender (in particular: quotas)

→ Can only be applied to women and men according to constitutional law; legislative adjustments to be desired
